

Facilitating Action Learning Virtually

Already experienced in Action Learning facilitation and want to learn how to confidently facilitate Sets virtually?

With a steep increase in virtual working many organisations need to take learning on-line. Having the experience and confidence to facilitate virtually is now a required skillset. This virtual facilitation course is packed with information, tools, practice and tips for successfully setting up and facilitating Action Learning sets virtually.

You will develop virtual facilitation skills, learn how to intervene without the same physical cues, and practice managing the technology alongside facilitating the group.

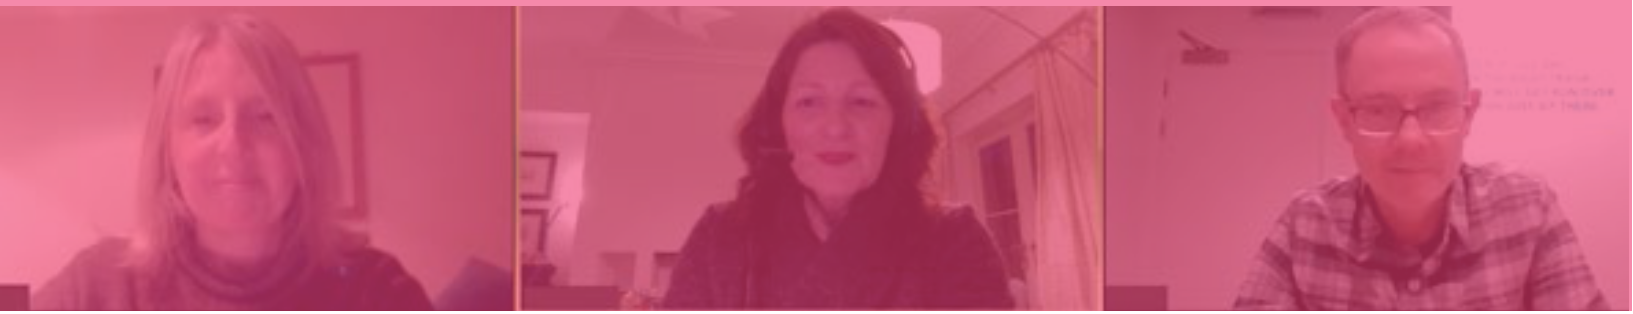

What you'll learn from this course, how to:

- Set up and establish a new group in a virtual world
- Master the practicalities and technology of working virtually
- Intervene to support individuals and the Set
- Develop participants questioning and listening skills
- Build trust and rapport
- Use different tools, techniques and visual prompts
- Manage participation and manage interruptions and distractions. Help people become present, focus and ready for the session.

Who is it for?

This course is for people who already facilitate Action Learning Sets or are trained to facilitate Action Learning.

The course is delivered by our experienced facilitators who have been facilitating on-line for a number of years. Bringing their wisdom they share valuable tips and know-how to effectively establish and facilitate Sets.

Course structure

The course starts with an introduction and orientation session. This is followed by four half day sessions one of which will be self-facilitated. There will be preparation and coursework to be done between sessions.

What you will require

- Prior knowledge or experience of facilitating Action Learning Sets
- A private place where you have access to the internet
- Computer or laptop and headset with microphone

"I was hesitant about facilitating action learning virtually but this course gave me confidence and solid foundations on which to build."
